ASSIGNMENT 109--WENDY NYASHA MAHENGA
FRONT OFFICE OPERATIONS

- Organisational chart of a front office:

Task A (I)

- Two types of job roles found in the front office
  - Cashier
  - Front desk receptionist

-Responsibilities of a cashier
- Receiving all the revenue of the front desk.
- Making sure that all receipts and invoice matches the services, making sure that there are not any over charges and under charges.

-Responsibilities of a front desk receptionist
- Performs all check in and check out tasks.
- Manages online and phone reservations.
- Informs customer about payment methods and verifies credit card data.
- Welcomes guests upon arrival and assigns rooms.

A(ii)

- Three different types of customer need

1. Directions

- The customer might ask for directions to a certain area from the receptionist. The receptionist should give correct directions make sure the customer understands.

2. Making a reservation

- The receptionist takes takes into account the type of room that the customer wants and checks if the room is available for the required time. The customer pays and the reservation is booked.

3. Information

- The front office receptionist answers any question the customer might have. If need be, the customer is offered a brochure that contains necessary information.

How the front office contributes to security

-There are safety deposit boxes in guests' rooms in which they can keep their valuables. Guests are given keys to the boxes upon registration.
-When a customer has completed registration, they are given a key to their room. They report suspicious circumstances in the establishments and inform their guests' so that the guests' worry less. They provide safers to guests to keep documents and jewellery in a safe provided in a room or at the front office. There is usually a spare key to the room and it is the front office's duty to make sure that the key does not land in the wrong hands.

Reasons why communication is important in the front office

- The front office is where the guests are received and given a warm welcome, communication on this part is important so as to provide guests with necessary information. Communication builds team work within the team. It is also important for safety reasons. There is also maintenance of customer service. Good communication skills like avoiding jargon are also necessary so as not to offend the guests.
- The front office also works hand in hand with other departments, communication with these other departments is necessary for the smooth flow of things in the establishment.